There is no silver bullet to end genocide and crimes against humanity. But there is a strategic one. We can stop mass atrocities and prevent these crimes in the future, through a framework called the “Three Ps”:

Promote Peace

Building peace costs less than picking up the pieces after a humanitarian crisis. ENOUGH urges persistent, high-level diplomacy aimed at creating sustainable peace for a more secure future.

Provide Protection

As we pursue peace, we must protect the innocent people. ENOUGH identifies and pushes for actions that the United States and its partners must take to protect a country’s citizens from crimes against humanity when their government cannot, or will not, save them.

Punish the Perpetrators

We must hold perpetrators accountable, both during and after atrocities. To break the cycle of impunity, ENOUGH advocates for substantive consequences on those who commit these crimes and those who provide support, advancing a path to justice that will deter future crimes.
