

Why South Sudan Succeeded,
Darfur Failed &
the Implications of the Arab Spring
John Prendergast

Wed., Feb. 8, 2012, 12:30 – 1:30 p.m.
Rm. 3911 Posvar Hall, Univ. of Pittsburgh

- The people of southern Sudan peacefully voted to secede, after two decades of war failed to bring independence.
- President al-Bashir has accepted the outcome but great uncertainty lies ahead.
 - Oil fields are in the south but export facilities are in the north.
 - Communal disputes in Abyei and the Nuba Mountains could spark widespread fighting.
- The violence in Darfur remains unresolved and cannot be ignored.
- Sudan is surrounded by countries completely transformed by the Arab Spring. Is Sudan next?

John Prendergast will be the Visiting Fellow at the Ford Institute and GSPIA from Feb. 7 – 17, 2012. He is a Co-Founder of the Enough Project, an initiative to end genocide and crimes against humanity. He is a veteran human rights advocate who has worked in government on Capitol Hill, in the White House, and at the State Department. In the non-governmental sector, he has worked at UNICEF, Human Rights Watch, the International Crisis Group, and the U.S. Institute of Peace.

Cookies and drinks will be served.
